Director's Discourse

Welcome to the fall edition of The Scope.

The Scope is a publication for all of you: residents and fellows, students and all the learners of the Marshfield Clinic. It is a publication to showcase your fellow colleagues and friends in their training programs as well as to highlight local community events and area attractions.

It is an exciting time at the Marshfield Clinic. We are in the process of integrating our health system with Sanford Health. With this includes a new educational partnership. Sanford Health has strong educational programming that is rapidly expanding. They have recently started several new residency and fellowship programs and have a similar goal of training the next generation of health care providers. We look forward to working together for our common mission.

The Marshfield Clinic residency and fellowship programs continue to expand as well. We just welcomed our largest incoming class of new residents and fellows. The Vascular Surgery Fellowship has welcomed its second fellow and has now its full complement. The Cardiology Fellowship celebrated its first graduation this last June and welcomed one of its graduates, Dr. Deepa Soodi, as a new faculty. We have also welcomed new program directors: Dr. Analise Hanneman for the Med-Peds Residency Program and Dr. Ali Nazerali for the Primary Care Emergency Medicine Fellowship.

I would also like to remind you if you are having trouble adjusting to your new role as a brand new intern, or even as an experienced senior resident, or if you are experiencing difficult circumstances, please feel free to contact the Resident Well-Being Committee (RWBC). It is a confidential resource that is available to you.

Welcome to a new academic year at the Marshfield Clinic, and good luck to all of you!

Flu Vaccinations Now Available at Marshfield Clinic Locations

Marshfield Clinic is now providing influenza (flu) vaccinations at all primary care locations throughout Wisconsin.

Influenza, commonly known as the flu, is a contagious respiratory illness caused by influenza viruses that infect the nose, throat and sometimes the lungs. It can range from mild to severe and in some cases can lead to serious complications, as well as hospitalization or death.

During the most recent flu season, more than 600,000 people were hospitalized and over 27,000 died from flu-related illness in the United States. More than 260 deaths were children, and 90% of those deaths occurred in children who were not fully vaccinated.

The 2024-2025 flu season was classified as high severity – the most serious since the 2017-2018 season.

Getting a flu vaccine each year is the most effective way to prevent influenza. Research shows that vaccination significantly reduces the risk of hospitalization and death due to flu.

"While no vaccine guarantees complete protection, flu vaccines help reduce the risk of severe illness and complications," said Dr. Thomas Boyce, infectious disease physician with Marshfield Clinic.

In the northern hemisphere, flu activity typically peaks between December and March, but can extend into May.

"Everyone should get a flu vaccine this year, preferably before November," Boyce said. "Flu seasons vary in timing and severity, and substantial flu activity can begin as early as November. It takes a couple weeks for your immune system to respond and generate protection after vaccination."

Some children may require two doses of the flu vaccine for protection. These doses must be spaced at least four weeks apart, so starting the vaccination process in September or October is recommended.

Marshfield Clinic will offer Fluzone for patients ages six months and older and Fluzone High-Dose for patients 65 and older. In addition, solid organ transplant recipients ages 18 to 64 years also may receive Fluzone High-Dose. The high dose vaccine designed to provide a greater level of protection against flu for patients eligible to receive it.

Vaccination is especially important for older adults and young children, who are more vulnerable to serious flu-related complications such as bacterial pneumonia, ear and sinus infections, and worsening of chronic conditions like heart failure, asthma or diabetes.

Flu vaccines also are important for pregnant women. Influenza can be harmful to the developing baby, and getting vaccinated during pregnancy helps protect newborns from flu illness and related hospitalizations
